

Why English?
Reading Group
Summer 2011
UW-L English Department

Bibliography

1. Marjorie Garber's "Introduction" and "Chapter 1: Use and Abuse" in The Use and Abuse of Literature (Pantheon, 2011).
2. Jacques Rancière's "Introduction" and "Chapter One" in The Politics of Literature (Polity, 2011).
3. Louis Menand's "Why We Have College" in The New Yorker (June 6, 2011).
4. Louis Menand's "The Humanities Revolution" in The Marketplace of Ideas: Reform and Resistance in the American University (Norton, 2010).
5. Martha Nussbaum's "Cultivating Imagination: Literature and the Arts" in Not For Profit: Why Democracy Needs the Humanities (Princeton UP, 2010).
6. Mark Slouka's "Dehumanized: When Math and Science Rule the School" in Harper's (September 2009).
<http://www.harpers.org/archive/2009/09/0082640>
7. Cristina Vischer Bruns's "Chapter Two: From Words on Paper to an Object in Transitional Space: Re-reading for the Formative Use of Literature" in Why Literature? (Continuum, 2011).
8. Robert Black's "Chapter 1: Italian Renaissance Education: an historiographical perspective" in Humanism and Education in Medieval and Renaissance Italy: Tradition and Innovation in Latin Schools from the Twelfth to the Fifteenth Century (Cambridge, 2001).
9. William McNeill's "Why Study History" for the American Historical Association (1983).
<http://www.historians.org/pubs/archives/whmcneillwhystudyhistory.htm>
10. Peter Stearns' "Why Study History?" for the American Historical Association (1998). <http://www.historians.org/pubs/free/WhyStudyHistory.htm>
11. Thorlac Turville-Petre's video "What's the point of studying medieval literature?" by ArtsPoint (2010).
<http://periodicvideos.blogspot.com/2010/04/why-study-medieval-literature.htm>
12. huntress' blog post "Why Study Literature?" on freethought forum (August 27, 2006). <http://www.freethoughtforum.com/forum/showthread.php?t=9764>
13. Frederick Luis Aldama's "Chapter 7: Teachers, Scholars, and the Humanities Today" and "Chapter 13: Why Literature Matters" in Why the Humanities Matter: A Commonsense Approach (Texas UP, 2008).